Letter of Recommendation

As for my subject, Iren had a thorough command of both written and spoken English. I was delighted to see in her essays her beautiful lyrical prose that could turn the most mundane incident into an interesting subject of analysis. She was very well read in the classics, with a special interest in British and American literature from the 19th century. I found quite impressive her attempts at writing short stories and burlesques of some of the popular romances from that period.

In class, Iren often started lively discussions on various topics. In that way she brought a novel and energetic perspective to my classes. In those discussions I saw her leadership potential and her ability to get across ideas in a clear and persuasive manner, while at the same time being tolerant and respectful of every other opinion. Her debate skills developed to the point where she could argue on any side of the debate and easily win contests.

As a person, Iren was very outgoing and friendly. She had always been caring towards her schoolmates and respectful of their opinions. Although she possessed special talents, what made her liked by everyone was her modesty and good heart. After classes she would set up improvised classes in our schoolyard and there help those of her schoolmates who had difficulty grasping the material.

Having all that in mind, I am confident that Iren has the potential to succeed in your college. Please notice this exceptional young woman for all the qualities she possesses.

Thank you for the opportunity for correspondence.

Sincerely:
Daniel Nikolov
